Six Little Kids

Six little kids in a circus tent,
Had never met an elephant,
And they closed their eyes to see what it is,
And took an elephant quiz.

Six little kids in a circus tent,
Had never met an elephant,
So they closed their eyes so they could see,
All the things an elephant can be.

“An elephant’s a rope,” said the one with its tail.
“No, an elephant’s a fan,” said the one with its ear.
“Uh-uh, an elephant’s a hose,” said the one with the trunk.
What have we here?

“An elephant’s a stick,” said the one with its tusk.
“No, an elephant’s a wall,” said the one at its side.
“An elephant’s a tree,” said the one with its leg.
How do we decide?

Six little kids, six points of view,
Which ones are wrong and which one’s true?

“An elephant’s a rope,” said the one with its tail.
“No, an elephant’s a fan,” said the one with its ear.
“No, an elephant’s a hose,” said the one with the trunk.
What have we here?

“An elephant’s a stick,” said the one with its tusk.
“No, an elephant’s a wall,” said the one at its side.
“No, an elephant’s a tree,” said the one with its leg.
How do we decide?

Six little kids, six points of view,
Which ones are wrong and Which one’s true?
Which one of them is true? Which one’s true?

“Hey, you know what? All of them are true!”
“Yeah, she’s right!”
All of them are true from different points of view. (repeat)
